Although not everyone has 100% sure of what a specific abbreviation represents, most are common enough so that if you see the abbreviation once, you will see again in another fanum. The abbreviations we use in text messaging and on the Internet are not as new as they may seem. Some as early as possible and FYI predict the internet for it. Others were created during the first days of the Internet. Many of these abbreviations were raised before the Internet was mainstream or how it was gaining popularity. In 1989, the World Wide Web was officially launched. However, there were already people to connect to early versions of each of the 1980s. At the time, people communicated through Usenet. Years ago since Usenet has been the main way people communicate on the internet, but their legacy lives. Terms and abbreviations created on these message boards remain in common use. If you are already on the internet, you came across a FAQ, a flame war, or received a piece of spam. You also witnessed people talking about things that happened IRL.
